DETERMINE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Located at the corner of Atwells Avenue and DePasquale Square in Providence's Federal Hill section, the A. F. Cappelli Block is a four-story unit of load-bearing masonry construction with heavy timber framing. Forty feet wide by one-hundred feet long, its bays are arranged in an eight to three ratio. The south and west facades of the building face the street, and are faced with red brick laid in common bond. Tan brick is used for quoining at the corners.

The ground floor houses the commercial enterprises of the building. The floor is divided into two stores, the larger of which opens onto Atwells Avenue. Cast-iron store fronts are still in place. Knee walls have been restored to their original height of three feet. The upper three stories, designed for residential use, are identical in appearance. There are seven apartments in the building, six of which are duplexes. Fenestration is organized in uniform vertical rows; however, the projecting rows of bay windows are positioned asymmetrically on the west elevation. The south elevation has one projecting bay group located in the center, flanked by a single, vertical row of windows to the right and double row to the left. In contrast to the projecting metal-sheathed bays which feature geometric diamond motifs, ornamental striation, and a strong horizontal subdivision, the windows flush with the wall are given a more severe treatment, emphasizing the flat wall plane. The openings are cut crisply into the wall. Flat, brick arches punctuated by slender keystones substitute for lintels. On the west elevation narrow mullions separate double groups of windows. A diamond motif continues on the frieze above the fourth floor, the geometric design of which serves to accentuate the pattern of fenestration. Bracketed, ornamental cornice in excellent condition and a low parapet wall cap the entire composition. Block-like elements which rest on top of the parapet at the corners add solidity to the building and further help to enframe the facade. The name of the building's proprietor and the date of completion appear prominently in cast stone on the topmost sections of the south and west sides, respectively.

Since the Cappelli Block is adjacent on two sides to other commercial structures, the north and east walls cannot be seen from the street, and never were intended to be. Thus, these elevations are devoid of ornamentation and receive only perfunctory fenestration for ventilation purposes.

The seventy-year-old building is presently undergoing extensive renovation work and the interior has been gutted. Original supporting members and firewalls remain, but the walls have been stripped to their brick foundation, to remain as finished walls.

See continuation sheet 1
The ground floor ceiling has been lowered to accommodate a new ventilation system. The original tin ceiling is in an advanced state of deterioration. The street floor of small hexagonal tile remains. Old paint has been sandblasted from the cornice and baywindows, and they have been repainted a dark brown. The original window frames are extant, and have been reglazed.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The A. F. Cappelli Block is important for its contribution to the commercial and architectural heritage of the Federal Hill community. The building is a significant example of the mixed-use building type associated with the development of the neighborhood's commercial district.

The Cappelli family came to America from Italy during the wave of immigration of the 1890's. Antonio and his brother, Nicolo, settled in Providence's Federal Hill section, a growing community of Italian immigrants and first-generation Italian Americans. The two brothers opened a wholesale wine and liquor business on Atwells Avenue, then and now the principal commercial thoroughfare on Federal Hill. After a few years the brothers opened their own separate stores. Antonio moved down the street to the northeast corner of Atwells and Arthur Avenues and constructed his own building to house his expanding business. The "Importer and Jobber" of "Wines, Liquors, and Olive Oil" (1911 advertisement) later diversified into the real estate business and became one of the principal builders in the Federal Hill area. After Prohibition put an end to the legitimate liquor business, the Cappelli Block housed other enterprises integral to the community, including successive grocery stores, pharmacies, and meat markets. After 1933 Cappelli remained in the real estate business.

The Cappelli Building is a good example of the mixed-use commercial block built at the turn of the century. Commercial activities were situated on the ground floor; offices and apartments were located above. The simplicity and logic of this type of building design is only beginning to be appreciated fully today. In its renovated state the Cappelli Block will retain its mixed-use character.

In an area of primarily clapboarded, balloon-framed, two and three-story structures, the masonry built Cappelli Block distinguishes itself among its neighbors. By today's standards a four-story structure is not particularly tall, but in the Federal Hill of 1909 it was, and is today, one of the tallest buildings in the area.

See continuation sheet 2
In late nineteenth century fashion the building's height is expressed by the use of the base-shaft-capital system of proportions. From the ground floor store fronts of ornamental metal work rises a shaft of three identical stories. The strong horizontal subdivision of the bay windows, in turn, divides the shaft into "layers." The projecting cornice then serves as the capital of a column and finishes the composition.

The Cappelli Block demonstrates a modest, yet skillful and richly detailed solution to the problem of the small-scale commercial building. In its newly renovated state the Cappelli Building recalls the day of the thriving downtown commercial district and reflects the recent revival of the Federal Hill neighborhood.
